this manual adopts a pragmatic approach to its treatment of criminal law and focuses specifically on those areas of criminal law which are most important to the junior criminal practitioner and which they are most likely to encounter during their first years in practice. Split into three distinct parts, the first part of the manual deals with the crucial procedural aspects of criminal law which will be encountered in practice, including the scope of legal powers to enter and search premises, and abuse of process. Part II covers selected areas of the substantive law, which are particularly relevant to the junior practitioner, including public order offences, dangerous drugs, offensive weapons, and drink driving and road traffic offences. The final section features an extended case study focusing on features which the practitioner will commonly encounter in practice, including police witnesses, custody records and conflicts of interest between defendants. Including realistic case papers and typical exhibits, this section also features a set of tasks to perform and a sample answer offering trainee barristers the opportunity to practise applying their skills in a criminal litigation context.

Cases in court are contests that turn on what can be proved or not. Judges have no special wisdom that gives them the ability to look at witnesses and divine whether they are speaking the truth. Judges follow established methods to decide the facts looking at probabilities and inconsistencies, credibility and interests to serve, sufficiency and reliability of evidence. They also seek to apply "common sense", bearing in mind that sense is not always common, and there's the issue of whose common sense should be applied. It is in this context that evidence becomes crucially important. Getting evidence in and out is the lawyer's challenge. This short book is intended to be a guide to evidence, in a practical way, for new lawyers as they navigate the civil process in their early days in court.
